COVID-19 Q & A of the Day

Question: Can you have COVID-19 and show no symptoms?

Answer: You can have COVID-19 and display no symptoms depending on your age, how strong your immune system is, and how recently you have been exposed. Because COVID-19 is extremely contagious, the virus can be transmitted easily - even by individuals without symptoms - which is why it is important to practice preventative measures even if you feel fine. These measures include wearing a face covering while in public, washing your hands frequently, using hand sanitizer, cleaning and disinfecting surfaces and items, avoiding sick people, covering your coughs and sneezes, avoiding touching your face, practicing social distancing (maintaining safe spaces, at least 6 feet, between people), and if any symptoms develop, staying home.
